INTRODUCTION

Offshore Oil and Gas Drilling is the Single Largest Dedicated Funding Source of Conservation and Outdoor Recreation in the U.S

A growing number of lawmakers and environmental groups have begun calling for a permanent ban on offshore oil and gas drilling. In March 2020, then presidential candidate Joe Biden declared, “No more drilling, including offshore, no ability for the oil industry to continue to drill, period.” From Alaska to the West and East Coasts, anti-drilling proposals are becoming common place. In May of this year, California narrowly defeated a bill that would have permanently banned drilling in all of California’s state waters. At the federal level, the COAST Anti-Drilling Act (HR 3116 and S 1851) to ban offshore drilling on the outer Continental Shelf along the Atlantic Coast currently has 28 co-sponsors in the House and 15 in the Senate.

Much of the discussion about a ban on offshore oil and gas production has centered on how it will negatively impact our energy markets, especially with current tight supplies and elevated prices for oil and gas. But what is missing from the conversation – and which deserves just as much attention – is that this ban would have devastating impacts on the nation’s ability to provide access to the great outdoors and critical wildlife conservation.

Here’s why. Besides the fact that offshore oil and natural gas production currently adds approximately 315,000 jobs and Treasury, the bottom line is that offshore oil and gas drilling provides the largest dedicated source of funding for conservation and outdoor recreation in the U.S., funding all 50 states and territories.

Created by Congress in 1964, the Land and Water Conservation Fund (LWCF) currently accrues $900 million annually in revenues, with nearly all derived from offshore oil and gas leasing. The LWCF was a bipartisan commitment to safeguard natural areas, water resources and our cultural heritage, and to provide recreation opportunities to all Americans. National parks like Acadia, the Grand Canyon, and the Great Smoky Mountains, as well as national wildlife refuges, national forests, rivers and lakes, coastal areas, community parks, trails, and ball fields in every state were set aside for Americans to enjoy thanks to federal funds from the LWCF.

“ From protecting clean drinking water to making the outdoors more accessible to everyone, the land and water conservation fund is essential to the health of our communities. More recreation around our natural wonders also means more good-paying jobs in places like rural Oregon.”

Sen. Ron Wyden (D-OR)

In 2020, with overwhelming bipartisan majorities, Congress passed the Great American Outdoors Act (GAOA), making the $900 million mandatory spending beginning in FY2021.

Moreover, the LWCF receives additional revenue under the Gulf of Mexico Energy Security Act of 2006 (GOMESA), which established revenue sharing for the four Gulf oil and gas producing states (Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Texas). Under GAOA and GOMESA, a combined total of up to $1.025 billion is available in mandatory spending for LWCF programs for most years.

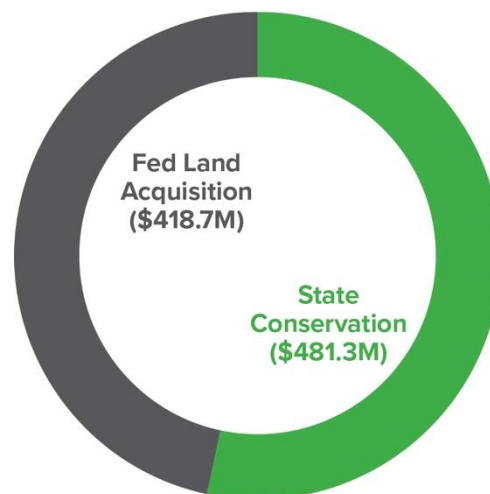

Because of these dedicated funding streams, banning offshore drilling would bankrupt the LWCF, shattering states' ability to provide access to the great outdoors and wildlife conservation.

How are LWCF Funds Allocated?

The LWCF provides competitive grants to states for local preservation and recreation projects, along with a federal portion to acquire lands and waters for public recreation or cultural resource preservation. The total amount and type of appropriations for the LWCF has been established by Congress.

For the President's FY23 Budget, of the $900M in mandatory spending, approximately 53 percent or $481.3M has been allocated for financial assistance to state conservation programs and 47 percent for federal land acquisition (Chart 1). LWCF is a principal funding source for land acquisition by the four major federal land management agencies, the Bureau of Land Management (BLM), the Fish and Wildlife Service (FWS), and the National Park Service (NPS)— all in the U.S. Department of the Interior (DOI)— and the Forest Service (FS) in the Department of Agriculture (USDA) (Chart 2).

CHART 1:
ALLOCATION OF $900M
(President's Budget FY2023)

Agencies that administer LWCF-funded programs have discretion to use different processes and criteria for prioritizing and allocating appropriations. These processes and criteria are based on the statute, distribution formulas, and state priorities and selection processes determined by field, regional, and headquarter offices. All projects undergo a ranking and scoring process based on criteria, including significance, urgency, management efficiencies, preservation, recreational value, and species and habitat. For outdoor recreation grants to states, the Secretary of the Interior allocates total funding for traditional/formula grants among states. Each state generally awards grant monies based on its own plans, priorities, and selection criteria.

State matching grant funding levels are determined by a population-based formula established under the LWCF Act, with state governments distributing funds to counties and other local governments through competitive grant applications. Through FY2020, these revenues were available only if appropriated in subsequent law (i.e., discretionary spending).

For federal land acquisition, the NPS awards funding through a competitive grant program that prioritizes urban and disadvantaged areas. The Forest Service provides grants to states for the Forest Legacy Program through a competitive process requiring state approval and then federal approval and ranking. Funding is also administered by the FWS that provides assistance for Section 6 consultation under the Endangered Species Act that go to states and territories for acquisition of critical habitat and preservation projects.

State Allocations

Every state and territory in the U.S receives millions of dollars annually from the LWCF. For example, in FY2022, the total amount of funds allocated to the state grant programs was over $279M, with individual state allocations ranging from $2M up to $23M (Chart 3). These funds are a significant investment in conservation, biodiversity, and local parks.

The remainder of this report highlights the various projects that have received LWCF funding during the past few years. It shows the benefits – and it provides insight into the type of projects that would be at risk if LWCF funding were to dry up.

ALLOCATION

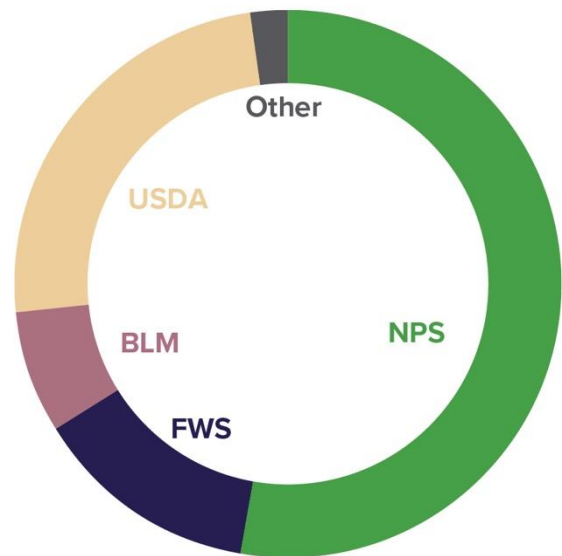

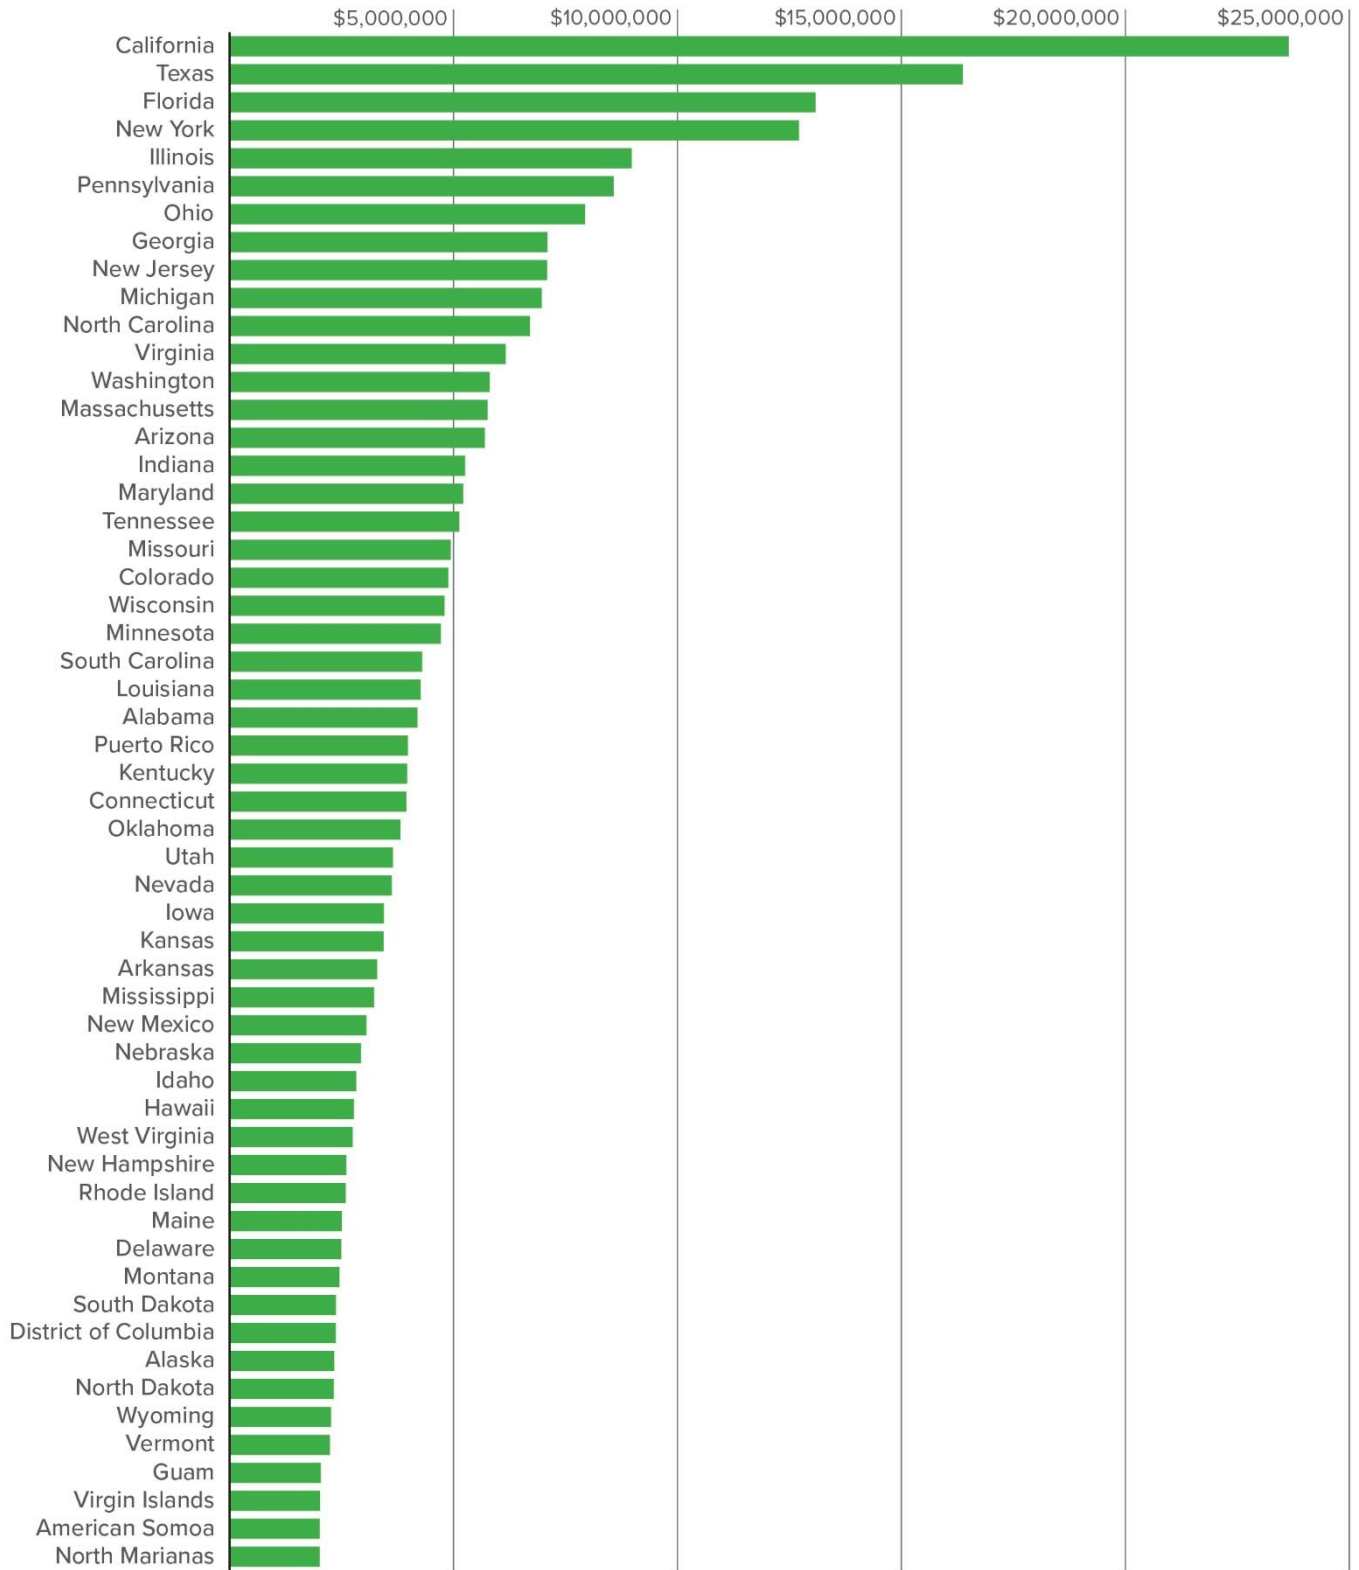

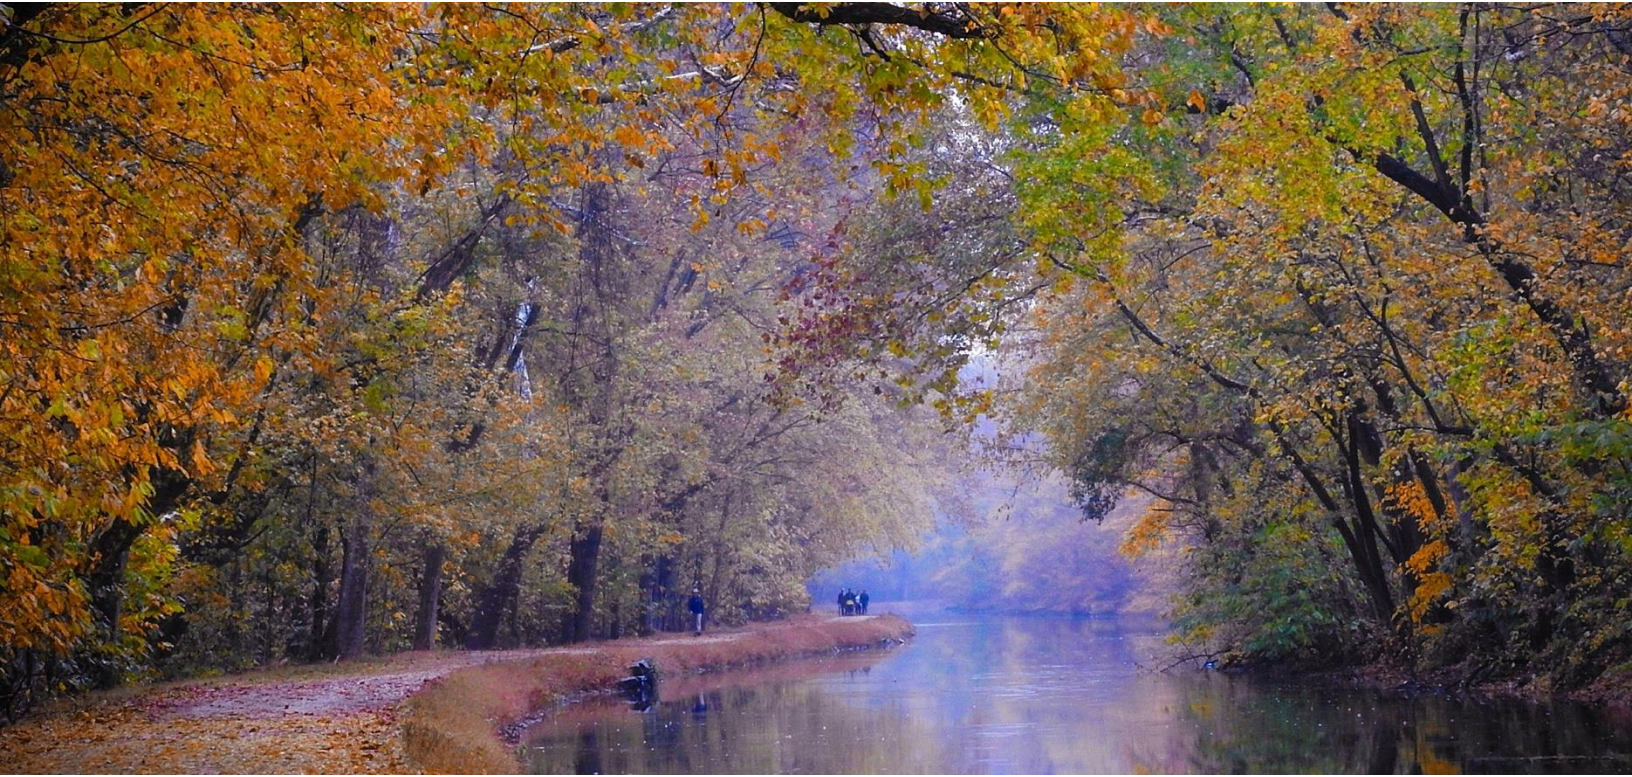

CHART 3: LWCF STATE ALLOCATED FUNDS FY2022 (USD)

METHODOLOGY

LWCF is responsible for ensuring America’s parks, outdoor space, historic sites, and more are adequately funded and protected. Each state and territory has an administrative agency responsible for the approval of grants and allocation of LWCF funds. A general prerequisite to receive funding requires each state and territory to produce a state-wide comprehensive outdoor recreation plan (SCORP).

The information and data included in this report reflects the most publicly available information on LWCF grant allocations to states and territories from 2016 – 2022. There is currently no public and comprehensive database of LWCF funding recipients. Additionally, not all funds are distributed to a specific project and are sometimes diverted to administrative planning (i.e., the SCORP process) and elsewhere.

ConservAmerica’s report outlines LWCF projects totaling at least $1 billion in appropriated grants. Our research reflects an as broad as possible assessment of the LWCF program and is not an exhaustive of all LWCF projects that exist today. Given the timeline and scope of this project, the grant total accumulated is a portion of the programs and communities that have benefited from the existence of the LWCF, and the royalties paid by energy companies into this fund. The state project list was sourced from state administrator websites and data sets, LWCF Coalition website, The Trust for Public Land website, and local news sources. Data cited from outside of the aforementioned sources are indicated as footnotes on the corresponding state page.

ALABAMA

TOTAL LWCF FUNDING IN 2022: $4,193,496
